The name of the show for this critique is "Merlin" aired from 2008-2012 and the genre of the show is drama/action to sum up this show it is about a young wizard named Merlin who has a destiny of protecting King Arthur and the obstacles he faces due to that. I enjoyed this series for a variety of reasons, you can tell just by watching the first episode, the imagery from this show is absolutely breathtaking and you can tell by the different castles, forests, clothing, and the landscapes that the budget was very high. Something that is a pro and con about the show is how emotionally attached you get to the show where you can really sympathize but also a con due to the ending of the series where King Arthur dies. For the first season I wish that it would have been more fast paced. It seemed like there were parts in these episodes that were unnecessary. Also the script makers made it to where the main character would be very annoying at times with the bad decision making due to the fact that he saw the good in everyone. The final critique I have for this series is the development of Morgana where she went from having minor disagreements from the king to plotting to kill him so quickly. This part did not make sense because there was no strong motive and it seemed very rushed.
